

Dear Hiring Team,

I am pleased to apply for the advertised technical writer role, leveraging my technical expertise and language skills to create clear, concise, and effective documentation.

During my academic years, I focused on advanced English proficiency through intensive IELTS and TOEFL training, achieving high scores that were essential for my Ph.D. admission. While completing my five-year Ph.D. in Computer Hardware Engineering at the University of Toronto, I conducted extensive research, delivered presentations, and published findings in academic journals. Alongside my research, I pursued my passion for technical writing and editing by completing advanced grammar, writing, and editing courses through the University of Toronto's Language Department, gaining expertise in structural editing, linguistic analysis, and proofreading. Between 2009 and 2024, I applied these skills in academic editing, collaborating with students from diverse disciplines to publish their work in academic articles.

In my professional engineering roles, I applied my technical writing skills to transform complex technical concepts into clear, audience-focused content for diverse stakeholders, including technical teams, managers, and end users. I authored and managed comprehensive documentation such as user guides, technical specifications, API documentation, and training materials. Additionally, I created instructional content for both engineers and non-technical stakeholders, collaborating effectively with cross-functional and multicultural teams to ensure the content met the needs of all audiences.

Although I have been advised that my qualifications may exceed the requirements of certain roles in this domain, my passion for technical writing motivates me to contribute and grow within the field. I am open to roles, regardless of title, and am flexible with compensation, seeking a reasonable agreement that reflects both the role and the current economic climate. I look forward to the opportunity to contribute to your team's success.

Best regards,

Ellarose Safi

North York, Ontario, Canada

Cell:

Email: